A CORRESPONDENT of the Shanghai Mercury writes from Tsi-peli-fu :- The Railway is progressing, but rather slowly. For seven miles southward the trains are now running, and the survey is completed for over forty miles further. Work is well advanced at the end of the seven miles stretch above referred to, where there commerces three miles of continuous ascent, the grade being 1 in 40, and sharp curves, with some fair sized banks and cuttings. Then comes forty miles of more easy ground for the greater part, through which the road has been made, but neither ballast or rails have yet been laid. Beyond this section some heavy ground is again encountered stretching to the big bridge of Tai-chia. So you see that with some forty-three miles of railroad building in progress the Foreign engineers and their staff have their hands with in that Bill. The letter of the Sauipretty full.
